SCREENING AND TREATMENT OF SUBCLINICAL HYPOTHYROIDISM OR HYPERTHYROIDISM: COMPARATIVE EFFECTIVENESS REVIEW NUMBER 24

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 128 pages. Dimensions: 11.0in. x 8.5in. x 0.3in. A mildly elevated thyroid stimulating hormone (TSH also called thyrotropin) concentration is the most common thyroid function test abnormality encountered in everyday practice. Most patients who have a mildly elevated TSH have a normal free thyroxine (T4) level. The treatment of such patients is controversial, particularly when they have few or no symptoms and no other clinical evidence of thyroid disease. Less frequently, clinicians encounter patients who have a low or undetectable serum TSH and normal triiodothyronine (T3) and free T4 levels. The management of these patients is also unclear. The main question addressed in this review was whether individuals who have mildly abnormal TSH values will either benefit from or be harmed by screening and potential subsequent treatment. We also addressed the question of whether the primary care clinician should screen for thyroid function in patients seen in general medical practice who have no specific indication for thyroid testing and who come to the clinician for other reasons. For the purposes of this review, we considered overt thyroid disease to be a well-defined clinical entity that has clear signs and symptoms, and thus, outside the scope of our review. In order for a condition to be a good candidate for screening in the general population, several conditions need to be met. First, the condition needs to be relatively prevalent, having a significant impact on the health of the population or an easily identified special population. Second, there needs to be a test that is readily available to the general population that is of reasonable cost and accuracy and is acceptable to individuals to undergo. Finally, there needs to be an intervention that is of reasonable cost and...
