In Bavaria, accidents were reduced by up to 35 percent, with 31 percent fewer crashes involving injuries (translated from Europe on Course - Telematics on German Roads German Ministry for Transportation, Construction and Housing 2005). In the Danish case, as a result of the traffic management applications implemented (speed harmonization, lane management and variable message system) - traffic loads on the surrounding streets were less than expected and accidents did not increase appreciably during the re-construction of the M3 Motorway, even though the existing roadway lanes were narrowed during the construction period (Wendelboe, 2008). England has also applied speed harmonization, known locally as Variable Mandatory Speed Limits (VMSL). On M-42, speed harmonization with hard shoulder running resulted in a seven percent increase in capacity and less overall congestion over the 12-month study period. Statistically valid safety analysis requires three years of data, but the initial results are encouraging (Mott MacDonald Ltd. , 2008). Additionally, a number of countries have documented a reduction in vehicle emissions after the implementation of speed harmonization. In The Netherlands, local traffic emission reductions of NOx were in the 20 to 30 percent range and PM10 was reduced by approximately 10 percent in the four test locations. In the UK, initial results found that vehicle emissions were reduced between four and 10 percent depending on the pollutant, and fuel consumption was also reduced by four percent (Mott MacDonald Ltd. , 2008).
