Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from About Perak Twenty years ago, it is probable there were not half a dozen Europeans who knew where Perak was or anything at all about it. In those years, however, the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society has published several maps of the Malay Peninsula, and on those maps Perak occupies a position that, if not immovable, is pretty generally North of Singapore, Malacca, and Selangor, and South of Siam, Kedah, and Province Wellesley. That is a sufficiently precise description for people in the Straits, without going into degrees of latitude and longitude; but, to enquirers west of Suez, it is safer to say, that, between India and China, there are two seas joined by a narrow stretch of water called the Straits of Malacca, and on the mainland which borders the northern side of those Straits is Perak. That you will find is a definition in all respects sufficient to satisfy geographical enthusiasm or any further interest in Perak.
